

Does a Witness' Deference to Different Specialty Concerning Diagnosis Constitute Concession of Lack of Qualifications to Provide Causation Opinion in Malpractice Claim?

Greenbaum attorney John Zen Jackson authored an article for Healthcare Perspectives, the firm's healthcare blog, about a New Jersey Appellate Division decision holding that an expert's deference to another specialty on diagnosis does not, by itself, bar the expert from offering a causation opinion, while also underscoring the need for that opinion to be supported by sufficient factual grounds.

Read the blog post

Related Attorneys

---

